History

Springfield Suburban Area Communities

AGAWAM, meaning crooked river, is sometimes called "The Mother of Springfield," because it was here that the original settlement of Springfield was founded by William Pynchon, Henry Smith and John Burt who traveled here from Roxbury, Massachusetts in 1634. This location was shortly abandoned for a site on the Springfield side of the Connecticut River. The first permanent settlement in Agawam was made in 1660 and was known as a parish of Springfield until 1774, and as the "South Parish" of West Springfield until its incorporation as a town in 1855. Although primarily an agricultural community, there was some manufacturing in this area. In 1873, mills manufacturing paper and woolen goods were operating in Agawam. In recent years, the town has become a residential suburb of Springfield. The Bowles-Agawam Airport in Agawam was considered one of the finest airports east of the Mississippi. Later, the Agawam Breeder's Association opened a horse racing course on the airport grounds.

The area of EAST LONGMEADOW, sometime before 1675, was inhabited by Indians called Pocomtucks, and it is believed they spoke an Algonquin dialect. Among the Indian artifacts which have been found in different parts of town, are a hide scrapper, a tomahawk point, and many arrowheads.

East Longmeadow, originally a part of Longmeadow, was settled in 1740 and was incorporated as a separate town in 1894. The land was used primarily for farming, but for more than a century after 1740, sandstone, popularly known as brownstone and redstone, was quarried in town and exported. At one time there were as many as eight quarries operating, which made East Longmeadow famous throughout the East.

The three major quarries were the Worcester Quarry on Somers Road, the Kibbe Quarry on Kibbe Road, and the Maynard Quarry with its real red sandstone of unequaled color, texture and durability. The Maynard Quarry off Elm Street was, for many years, a popular swimming spot known as Redstone Lake, and was reactivated by the McCormick Stone Company in 1965 for a short period.

Many structures made of East Longmeadow Brownstone can be found in the Springfield area, such as the Springfield Arsenal at the Armory, Watershop Dam and East Longmeadow Town Hall in Center Square.

In other parts of the country it has been used on buildings at Wesleyan, Yale, Princeton, and for Trinity Church in New York City.

Today East Longmeadow has changed from quarrying and farming to a residential community, with one section of town established as an industrial park area for large companies such as Milton Bradley, Sun Shine Art Studios, Package Machinery and American Saw Company.

East Longmeadow has a historical commission which came into being in 1970, designed to preserve, promote, and develop the town's historical assets. A supporting group was established in 1972 known as "Friends for Historic Preservation." Also that year the house of a former town clerk became the Historical Headquarters and Museum Building, located at 25 Maple Street.

The East Longmeadow Historical File containing many old records, deeds, clippings, pictures, and current articles is located in the public library.

HAMPDEN was incorporated as a town on March 28, 1878. The town's first settler arrived in 1741, and nine years thereafter, Lewis Langden erected the first saw mill. Around 1775, he also erected a grist mill. In 1878, a large mill was built which manufactured doeskins and cassimeres. Up to and including 1880, the largest industrial activity seemed to be the manufacture of textiles. Unusual products for a New England town were plows made to be drawn by slaves. The factory for their manufacture was erected in the 1850s and thrived until the Civil War. Immense quantities of charcoal were made in the eastern part of the town and the brick kilns for its manufacture may still be seen. The Springfield Armory and tobacco growers in Connecticut used Hampden charcoal. Potash was also manufactured in quantity. Kibbe's Cider Mill on South Road was an early industry, the operative power consisting of "One Horse," "going round and round," later replaced by modern machinery. In the latter part of the 19th century, three large woolen mills, the Laconsic Ravine, and Scantic Mills did a thriving business, producing satinet, tweeds, cassimeres, yarn and blankets.

Today, Hampden is a semi-rural residential community within the Springfield-Chicopee-Holyoke Standard Metropolitan statistical area with many summer homes established among the hills of the town.

Originally a part of Springfield, LONGMEADOW was once the Indian village of Masacksick. The land was purchased from the Indians in 1636 and was believed settled as early as 1644 by two pioneers known as Quartermaster Colton and John Keep. Incorporated in 1783, the town derived its name from the "long meddowe" which ran along the Connecticut River. In 1709 there was a general movement of the original settlement to a more elevated section owing to frequent flooding along the river. Rich, alluvial soil of the Connecticut Valley gave Longmeadow a head start in agriculture with abundant crops of hay, grain, and later tobacco. Here too, was found a profitable bed of red sandstone known as Longmeadow red freestone. With the exception of saw and gristmills and blacksmith shops, which serviced every early settlement, the manufacturing pursuits in the town have never been extensive. The first industry of any consequence was the manufacture of gold and silver thimbles, started by Diamond Chandler in 1838 and carried on for about ten years. Chandler also started the manufacture of buttons in 1848 and while this industry grew considerably, it later moved to Springfield. Some manufacturing was done at the mouth of the Pecawsic Brook and a small pistol factory was opened there. Later a papier-mache plant turned out pails, basins, globes, and various other articles, but this business too, was shortlived. Today Longmeadow is a residential community with a population which commutes to Springfield for work. Large numbers are employed in trade, construction, and service industries as is the case in most suburban towns.

LUDLOW was established as a district in 1774 from a part of Springfield called "Stony Hill" and was incorporated on August 23, 1775. The first manufacturing establishments were those devoted to woodworking, generally saw mills. Soon after 1800, Rufus Calkins opened a chair shop. A sash and blind factory was, for a time, one of the town's noted industries and it later turned out rakes and other agricultural implements. Tar and potash were made at various places and times in the town. The Ludlow Glass Works, manufacturers of green glass for bottles, was established.

Two or three manufacturers of woolen goods were in the town and at one time Ludlow boasted a distillery. Around 1800, Abner Putnam erected a shop for the manufacture of scythes, and in 1821, 1823 and 1826 mills were built for the manufacture of cotton goods. In 1840, a factory was erected for the manufacture of gun barrels for the United States government. The Ludlow Manufacturing Company organized in 1868, manufactured jute goods, twine and bagging, and its business fortunes were the life of the town up to 1878, when more mills were erected and opened.

For many years Ludlow was a small industrial community, but today it has become a residential suburb of Springfield and Chicopee.

WEST SPRINGFIELD was first settled as part of Springfield in 1635, only fifteen years after the Pilgrims landed. It was incorporated as a separate town in 1774. For many years it was a farming community with local industry developing gradually. West Springfield now has diversified business and light industry with Massachusetts Electric Co. and the John H. Breck Co. among the largest. Recently an industrial park has been developed, attracting strong new technology to the area.

The town is proud of its past and of its landmarks. The Old White Church on the Hill on Elm Street, completed in 1812, has been designated a national monument. The Old Day House on the common, built in 1754, is thought to be the oldest brick salt box in the county.

The common has two landmarks which were rebuilt by service clubs to commemorate the Town Bicentennial in 1974: the bandstand, a replica on the original site, and the rock fountain, restored and reactivated. Plaques commemorate the march of General Knox in 1775 and the Hessian soldiers' encampment in 1777, events which occurred on the common during the Revolution.

A marker on Birnie Avenue designates the location of the Morgan farm where the first Morgan Horse was bred about 1789 by Justin Morgan.

The Eastern States Exposition on Memorial Avenue began in 1916. Every September the Big E offers a wide variety of educational and entertaining events from livestock shows to big name stars. It is a growing and changing fair which attracts thousands of people annually.

Old Storrowton Village on the grounds of the Exposition is open year-round. The original buildings were taken down, board by board, in various New England towns and then reassembled to the last detail as they were when first erected around two hundred years ago.

WILBRAHAM was known as the fourth precinct of Springfield in 1741 and was incorporated as a town in 1763. As a manufacturing town, Wilbraham was not prominent prior to 1865, although a grist mill and a number of saw mills were in operation as early as 1750. A woolen mill was started in 1845 and was followed by two others. There were also the old carding and fulling mills which produced cloth for domestic purposes, and a tannery owned and operated by Thomas and Henry Howard. The Collins Paper Company was established in 1872 and the Cutler Mills, manufacturing feed and grain, was started in 1877. Wilbraham Academy (originally known as Wesleyan Academy) was started in 1817. It was co-educational, but after its reorganization in 1911, it became a boys' school (now co-educational again). This school has now become Wilbraham and Monson Academy.

Today, Wilbraham is a residential community, within the Springfield-Chicopee-Holyoke Standard Metropolitan statistical area. Summer colonies have been developed around the lakes in this area.
